

Monika Krakowska

Institute of Information and Library Science at the Jagiellonian University in Krakow, Poland

The most important courses that I teach at my University are: Information Literacy, Multimedia in Social Communication, Information Sources, Emotions in Human Information Behaviour, Digital Libraries for Information Society (science, education, culture) and European Information

I am the Assistant Professor (with PhD) in the Institute of Information and Library Science at the Jagiellonian University. The IILS JU graduate, the specialist in the scope of the library science and the scientific information. I was involved in the European Union projects such as COINE (Cultural Objects in Networked Environment), HERN (Higher Education Reform Network) or EURIDICE (European Recommended materials for Distance learning Courses for Educators). I am interested in my research in emotions in information behavior especially in information grounds and information literacy and its impact on users (mental models, searching & retrieving, use of e-sources). Also conduct research in new tools and forms of information and communication technology usage, affective information behavior, and digital libraries. In the meantime with friends from the University and also with information and library science students I am involved in the music project Open Access (this is also the idea of free access to electronic resources in the Internet) in which I am one of the vocals☺ (<http://www.openaccess.pl/>) Within TeaCamp Moodle Course Virtual Learning in Higher Education I would like to introduce you to information literacy basis, the concept of this discipline or activity and would like to introduce how to be information literate.